

1787 National Committee Announces Launch of New U.S. Political Party

Party Plans to Field Candidates in the 2028 Elections

Organization Plans to Establish Offices in 10 States and Washington, D.C.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 2026 – 1787 National Committee today announced the launch of a new American political party seeking to transform the nation’s political system through expanded political choice, principled leadership, and a comprehensive, long-term approach to governing. The organization is committed to principle before party, problem-solving before partisanship, and the will of the people before the will of a political machine – all in pursuit of its overriding purpose: to cultivate the greatest version of the United States of America.

“1787 is about changing the way American politics works—not just changing who’s in charge,” said Emily Mathews, Founder and Chairman of 1787 National Committee. “For too long, we’ve tried to solve our nation’s challenges within the same two-party framework, expecting different results without fundamentally changing the system. We believe real progress begins by opening the political process to more voices, more ideas, and more meaningful choices. But political competition is only the beginning. Americans also deserve leaders who govern with integrity and intellect, and a comprehensive national strategy that recognizes how all our challenges are connected. The American people are capable of extraordinary things, and it’s time our government reflected that.”

More than 150 policy proposals are available on the organization’s website, providing a foundation for public discussion and an integrated national strategy. 1787 believes the character of government matters as much as the policies it pursues. The organization advocates leadership grounded in honesty, integrity, transparency, intellectual discipline, and civility, with respect for the dignity, rights, and liberties of every American, regardless of political affiliation, background, or personal beliefs.

1787 plans to field qualified candidates in the 2028 presidential, congressional, and state and local elections and establish offices in Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Texas, Wisconsin, and Washington, D.C. In a departure from conventional presidential campaign practices, 1787 also intends to publicly identify its proposed nominees for every Cabinet position before the 2028 presidential election, giving voters the opportunity to evaluate the prospective administration—not just its presidential candidate—before casting their ballots.
