OFFICIAL MEDIA FACT SHEET

AT A GLANCE

Organization: 1787 National Committee

Website: 1787forAmerica.org

Mission: To transform the nation's political system through expanded political choice, a higher standard of leadership and governing, and a comprehensive, interconnected long-term approach to governing—all in pursuit of building an America that lives up to its greatest potential and empowers its people to do the same.

Electoral Plans: 1787 will field candidates in the 2028 presidential, congressional, state, and local elections.

A Presidential Cabinet Announced Before Election Day: 1787 will identify the individuals its presidential candidate would nominate for every Cabinet position before the 2028 presidential election. This approach will give voters an opportunity to evaluate not only the candidate and proposed policies, but also the people who would help lead the country and implement its national strategy. 1787 believes Americans deserve to know as much as possible about the administration they are being asked to elect.

Policy Foundation: More than 150 interconnected policy proposals, offered as a foundation for public discussion, refinement, and the development of a comprehensive national strategy.

Planned Offices: Arizona, California, Florida, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Texas, Wisconsin, and Washington, D.C.

WHAT IS 1787?

1787 National Committee is a new American political party with an ambitious mission: to fundamentally transform the nation's political system, redefine the standards of political leadership and governing, and advance a bold, comprehensive, long-term vision for the future of the United States of America.

The organization challenges the dominance of America's two-party system and the political structures, practices, and traditions that have defined how power is won, exercised, and maintained for generations.

1787 does not exist to preserve a political establishment, enforce ideological conformity, or perpetuate politics as usual. The organization believes the country needs more than new candidates or different policies. It needs a fundamentally different approach to politics and governing—one that expands meaningful political competition, champions a higher standard of leadership and governing, and replaces fragmented, short-term policymaking with a coordinated national strategy that addresses the interconnected challenges facing the country—while putting principle before party, problem-solving before partisanship, and the will of the people before the will of a political machine.

THE SIX DEFINING NATIONAL GOALS

Protect American democracy, and champion individual liberty and a higher standard of leadership: A government that serves the people, upholds the Constitution, protects fundamental rights, and is worthy of public trust.

Restore fiscal responsibility and an efficient government for a strong, competitive economy: Sustainable public finances, efficient government, and long-term economic strength and prosperity.

Expand opportunity, fairness, and quality of life for every American: Greater opportunity, access to affordable life essentials, and a society where people have a fair chance to succeed.

Lead in education, science, innovation, and economic competitiveness: A skilled workforce, breakthrough research, and the technologies and industries that drive long-term American leadership.

Build a resilient, secure, and sustainable America for future generations: A practical, forward-looking transition toward lower-carbon energy, strong infrastructure, a healthy environment, and a nation prepared to meet the challenges of tomorrow.

Strengthen national security and uphold principled American leadership in the world: A strong defense, trusted alliances, and principled leadership that advances America's security, values, and global stability.

WHAT MAKES 1787 DIFFERENT?

More Meaningful Political Competition: 1787 believes changing the way politics is played requires opening the political process to more voices, more ideas, and more meaningful choices—not simply transferring power between two established parties.

A Higher Standard of Leadership and Governing: The character of government matters as much as the policies it pursues. Integrity, truthfulness, transparency, accountability, civility, and respect for every American are fundamental standards that guide every decision, every policy, and every action of government.

A Comprehensive, Interconnected, Long-Term Approach to Governing: America's domestic and international challenges are deeply interconnected. The 150+ policy proposals are designed not as isolated initiatives, but as coordinated components of an integrated, long-term national strategy.

Policies Open to Public Scrutiny and Improvement: The 150+ policy proposals are intended as a substantive starting point for scrutiny, discussion, and improvement—not an inflexible ideological platform.

A Goals-Driven National Vision: 1787 organizes its governing agenda around six defining national goals, guided by two foundations – a higher standard of governing and a comprehensive, interconnected long-term approach – connecting specific policy proposals to clearly defined national priorities and a shared vision for America's future.

An Administration Voters Can Evaluate Before Election Day: 1787 intends to announce its prospective presidential Cabinet before the 2028 election, giving Americans an opportunity to evaluate not only the presidential candidate and proposed policies, but also the individuals who would help lead the country and implement its national strategy.

WHY THE NAME 1787?

In 1787, courageous patriots gathered at the Constitutional Convention to reimagine how their young nation would be governed. America's founders did not simply accept the existing structure because it was familiar. They recognized its shortcomings, challenged established assumptions, and undertook the extraordinary task of designing something better. The result was a remarkable framework for self-government—one with the capacity to endure, adapt, and evolve.

Their achievement was extraordinary, but the work of creating a more perfect union was only beginning. The original Constitution reflected profound limitations of its era, including the accommodation of slavery and the exclusion of much of the population from meaningful political participation. Over generations, Americans have worked to confront those injustices, expand the promise of liberty and equality, and strengthen the nation the founders established.

Today, 1787 seeks to carry forward that same spirit of courage, imagination, and determination—not to return America to the eighteenth century, but to embrace the responsibility of improving its political institutions for the future.

The founders of the United States did not finish the work of creating a more perfect union. They began it. And 1787 believes every generation has a responsibility to honor what they built, protect what makes America extraordinary, and strengthen our nation for generations to come.
